Filtration Material

Generally, the filtration material used for air filters manufacturing is the filtering paper based on cellulose fibres impregnated with phenolic, epoxy or acrylic resins. The impregnation of cellulose fibres protects it from water, oil and fuel fumes. For modern materials, additions of synthetic fibres which increase filtrating efficiency and contaminants absorption are often used. Also completely synthetic filtration materials - unwoven fabrics are made, which due to its specific structure are able to trap several times more contaminants than traditional filtering paper and maintain high efficiency and low flow resistance.

Oil Filters

The lubrication system of I.C. engines are closed systems, where the oil is the substance, which lubricates and cools the working parts. It also rinses out and transports all kinds of contaminants in the form of suspended solids coming out from the combustion chamber, formed during the abrasive wear of the working parts of the engine. Such contaminants are effectively trapped in filters, which are an important element of the lubricating system in any I.C. engine. The oil filters have different shapes and depending on the engine type may differ significantly regarding construction and principle of operation.

In the mid-1950s, the spin-on oil filter design was introduced: a self-contained housing and element assembly which was to be unscrewed from its mount, discarded, and replaced with a new one. This made filter changes more convenient and potentially less messy.

Spin-on can type

In older types of engines, in particular for truck there used to be dismountable housings with replaceable filtering cartridge. Modern, presently manufactured engines, both for trucks and cars may also have this solution applied.

Oil filter cartridges

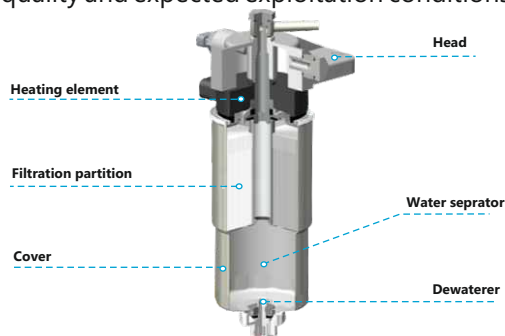

Oil filter cartridges with non-woven filtering medium are used as fine filters and installed in a by-pass method in the engine oil system. They are designed for trapping the smallest fractions of contaminants of size appr. 1  $\mu\text{m}$ , which get through the filter media in full flow filters.

OC type cartridge (with fabric filter medium)

Fuel Filters

Fuel filters trap contaminants present in fuel, diesel oil and even in LPG installations, protecting precise elements of I. C. engines fuel systems from rapid wear. These fuels contain contaminants from the production process and distribution. Dust, soot from outer tank surfaces, water and micorganisms may cause the rapid wear of injectors, pumps or pressure-regulating valves in modern engines. Therefore each fuel system has filters which are optimally selected according to engine requirements, fuel quality and expected exploitation conditions.

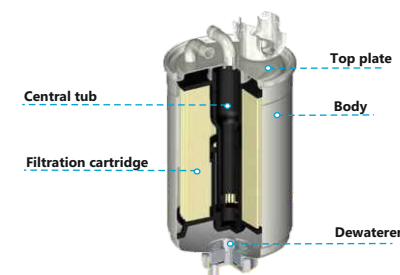

These filters are designed similarly as can type oil filters, however, they do not have any inner valves and there are often filters used with characteristic drain plugs inside the separator.

Can type fuel filters

In-line fuel filters are applied in fuel systems, especially in petrol carburettor engines and fuel injection engines, installed on the fuel pipe using quick connect fittings or band clips. These filters have a filtering cartridge with paper medium, which is pleated or warped.

Air Filters

Round air filters

Round air filters, with cylindrically or ring shaped filter medium are a traditional construction used in cars with sufficient amount of place in the bonnet, to fit a large volume casing.

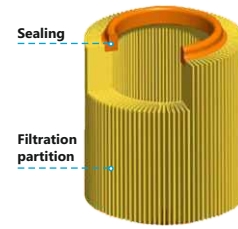

Round air filter cartridges are always compressed during the working of engine, since the air filtered flows through usually inwards to get directly into the engine by inlet pipes.

Reinforced

Prefilters applied in some types of round filters are the additional filter media, generally made of unwoven fabric and installed for exploitation in dustiness or when longer replacement periods are required.

With pre-filter

Sealing lips are used in round filters when the pleat of the filter medium are additionally glued on the edges, forming hermetic pockets.

Air filter cartridge with sealing lip

Panel air filters

Panel air filters are installed in almost all presently manufactured car and van models. They replaced previously used round filters, as the panel filter casings take less space with the comparable filter medium surface.

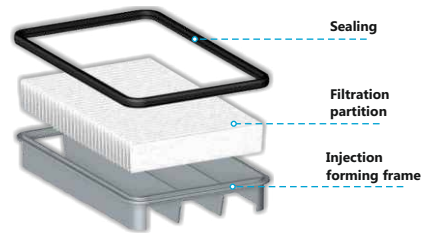

Special elements are used to increase the rigidity of panel filters during their exploitation. These are specially made glue trickles, metal or plastic nets.

Reinforced

Pre-filters are used for panel filters in high dust conditions or when long exploitation period is required. Pre-filters are additional filter media made of fabric and glued to the top of panel pleats.

With pre-filter

The solution is injection moulding of the fibre filter into a rigid frame. Sometimes pleating the fibres with special plastic nets is applied for increasing the rigidity of the filter medium and protection from damage during exploitation.

Using the injection method

Air filter casing

Filters for trucks

Diesel engines installed in trucks, machinery, road machines, building and agricultural equipment due to its capacity, use significantly more air than cars. Required contaminant filtering efficiency comes up to 99,9%. Also the contaminants absorptivity must be high due to long periods between cartridge replacements. All these factors lead to large sizes and solid construction of air filters for trucks.

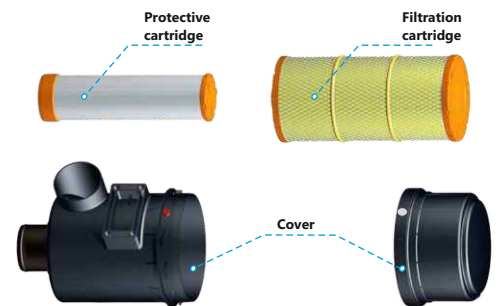

In traditional air filters for trucks and heavy duty machines the rigidity and resistance to mechanical damage was important. The filter medium placed inside such a solid construction is perfectly protected from deformation and mechanical damage.

Traditional construction

The priority, in designing filters for trucks, is eliminating metal parts and replacing them with plastic elements, which make filter utilisation process easier.

Modern constructions

Air filter casing for trucks

Cabin Filters

Dust, pollen, soot and also pollutant gases such as nitrogen oxides or ozone can make travelling by car a very difficult experience. Especially asthma sufferers really appreciate a good climate in the car interior. People who need to breathe relaxed at any time in a car rely on cabin fillters from Zip Filter. cabin filters come in two versions: firstly a high quality particle filter and secondly a combination filter with activated carbon. The activated carbon layer embedded in fleece bonds pollutant gases such as nitrogen oxides, fuel vapours or ozone in the pores which are 10,000 times finer than a human hair. This leaves absolutely no chance for unwanted guests in the interior.
